jargon
berthing /'bɜ:θiŋ/ (seamanship, ship & line handling) = docking ANTONYM unberthing manoeuvring the ship to its berth in the port and mooring it to the quay, dock or pier pristajanje, privezivanje, koštivanje, akoštavanje: A 100m long, liquid petroleum gas tanker was conducting a routine berthing at a "T" jetty, which was connected to dolphins by walkways. The master insisted on being on the bridge for the canal transit, and for berthing and un-berthing. ~ manoeuvre manovra pristajanja: The two men did not discuss the ship's manoeuvring characteristics, the status of the propulsion or how the berthing manoeuvre would be carried out. The vessel was equipped with a bow thrust unit, rated at 20t, to assist with berthing manoeuvres., preparation for ~ priprema za privezivanje: On this occasion, when several items of heavy electrical load were started in quick succession in preparation for berthing, the generator frequency dropped below 58Hz.
berthing accommodation (n) (ports) smještaj na vezovima za brodove u luci, smještajni kapacitet za brodove (u luci), svi vezovi zajedno (u nekoj luci) berthing alongside (n) (seamanship, sailing/boating/yachting, ship & line handling)

MARITIME ENGLISH CORPUS

https://tshwanedje.com/

Using tlCorpus Software developed by David Joffe and Malcolm MacLeod (advisor: Gilles-Maurice de Schryver), a comprehensive Maritime English Corpus has been compiled and designed by the compiler of the Dictionary. The Corpus encompasses the texts related to the wide definition of the concept of 'maritime English' and includes the subcorpora on the following:

- Ship design and construction; naval architecture; ship types
- Shipyards and shipbuilding
- Ship's hull, machinery and equipment
- Ship systems
- General seamanship
- Navigation and navigational equipment, navaids
- Maritime communications
- Marine Engineering, propulsion and auxiliary machinery
- Ship handling and manoeuvring
- Marine electrical engineering and electronics
- Ship automation
- Ocean science, marine geography, hydrography
- Marine meteorology
- Human resources on board ships and in maritime transport
- Health protection and wellbeing of seafarers
- Cargoes carried by sea, cargo handling and stowage; ship stability
- Ports and harbours
- Maritime transport and logistics
- Shipping industry and economics of shipping
- Maritime law and law of the sea; marine insurance
- Safety and protection at sea
- Protection of the marine environment
- Navy and naval ships
- Sailing vessels
- Fishing
- Boating and yachting
- Sailboat racing
- Maths and science
- Jargon, archaisms, figurative use
- Etc.

The 14 million word corpus (1240 texts) has been compiled from the web sources, maritime-related books, handbooks, manuals, journals, etc.

NOTES ON THE USE OF THE DICTIONARY:

Headword (main entry, Lemma) = English language entries on the left-hand side of the dictionary. Headwords can be:

(a) single words (cable, berthing) or

(b) multi-word units (berthing accommodation, berthing alongside)

Homonym = words of the same form but different, or partly different, meaning (cable1, cable2, cable3, cable4 etc.)

Pronunciation = IPA (International Phonetic Association) transcriptions are applied

= (other forms of the word) = derivatives, spelling variations, abbreviations, related words

Part of speech = n (noun), v (verb), adj (adjective), adv (adverb), prep (preposition), prep. phrase, etc.

Sub-entries = multi-word expressions (all red-coloured):

(a) a word or group of words (adjective or noun) + headword (marked by the sign ~), e.g. supply ~ = supply cable; electrical ~ = electrical cable; preparation for ~ = preparation for manoeuvre

(b) headword (marked by the sign ~) + a word or group of words, e.g. ~ armour; ~ gland; ~

Usage labels: = Labels mark the register (i.e. maritime-related subject field) where the headwords (terms) or sub-entries are used; In this dictionary these include the following:

arch(aic)	figurative	mar(itime) law	sailing vessels
sailing/boating/yachting	financ(ial)	math(ematical)	seam(anship)
cargo	fishing	med(ical)	ship_equipment

Definition + source of definition Where available, definitions are given their source(s); other defintions are adapted or suggested by the author.

= References = references to semanically related word(s); lexical relations: equivalence, synonyms, antonyms; see, compare)

Sense 1, 2, 3 … = different meanings of the same headword according to their use marked by usage labels (e.g. naval architecture,navig, marine engineering, seamanship, ship equipment, sailing/boating, safety, cargo handling, jargon, obsolete, chemical, medical, UK, US, etc.)

Translation equivalent (TE) = Croatian language equivalents or translations of headwords and sub-entries.

Note that Croatian translation equivalents shown in italic, e.g. škeram, prova, štiva, blackout, lockdown podesiti, podešavanje etc. (mainly loan-words from Italian, English and other languages), are examples of sailor's jargon, local dialects or substandard forms in Croatian. They are frequently used on board ships or on the Croatian Adriatic Seaside.

Example + source of example = examples are mainly taken from web sources, either in the original form or slightly adapted

Note = notes are entered occasionally to enter comments on the usage of an entry or concept

AIS /,ei ai 'es/ (=Automatic Identification System) (n) (navig, safety) Automatic Identification System (AIS) - Used to help identify vesels,to assist in target tracking (based on Global Navigation Satellite System), and to improve quality of information available to OOW. AIS continually transmits the ship's own data to other vessels adn VTS stations. It also continuously receives data from other vessels and VTS stations and, when linked to radar or ECDIS, can also display this data. AIS transmits: static data (MMSI number, call sign and name, IMO number, length and breadth, type of ship, location of position fixing antena), dynamic data (ship's position, position time in UTC, course over grouns, speed over ground, heading, navigational status, rate of turn), and voyage data (ship's draught,m hazardous cargo, destination and ETA, route plan - waypoints) (Seamanship Notes 2004).; AIS is a navigation and anti-collision tool enabling the exchange of ship-to-ship information.

This process enables engineers to analyse the ship's behaviour under various conditions, ensuring its safety and efficiency., © Damage stability analysis – assessing a ship's ability to remain stable and afloat in the event of damage to its structure. This crucial aspect of detail ship design helps designers implement measures to enhance a vessel's resilience against potential hazards at sea., (d) Full liaison with class and governmental agencies – essential during detail ship design to ensure compliance with industry regulations and standards. Collaborating closely with these entities facilitates the approval process and ensures that the vessel meets all necessary requirements for operation., (e) Intact stability analysis – evaluating a ship's stability in its undamaged condition. By examining factors such as weight distribution and buoyancy, engineers can optimise the vessel's design to achieve optimal stability performance while maintaining operational efficiency., (f) • As the owners' representative, our experts oversee detail ship design projects on behalf of the ship's owners, ensuring that their interests and requirements are met throughout the process. This role involves coordinating between various stakeholders to achieve the desired outcome efficiently., (g) • Production of stability books and documents – compiling comprehensive records detailing a ship's stability characteristics and operational limitations. These documents serve as valuable references for crew members and authorities, enhancing safety and regulatory compliance., (h) • Specialist stability analysis – including launching, grounding and drydocking assessments, focusing on evaluating a ship's stability during critical phases of its lifecycle. By conducting detailed analyses in these areas, engineers can mitigate risks and ensure safe and efficient operations throughout the vessel's lifespan. } blank sailing (=void sailing) (n) (shipping econ, logist) Blank sailing occurs when, due to various reasons, a liner service operator might decide to cancel the call of a vessel at a certain port or certain region, or the entire leg. When that happens, that particular port/region/entire route will have a "blank sailing" which simply means that for that week or fortnight or month (depending on the frequency of the liner service) that area will not have a vessel to discharge or load cargo (https://shippingandfreightresource.com/blank-sailing/); When an ocean vessel does not call at one or more of its scheduled intermediate stops, it is called a blank sailing or void sailing from these ports. (https://www.marineinsight.com/maritime-law/what-is-blank-sailing/); A blank sailing (a void sailing) is a sailing that has been canceled by the carrier. The users agree about the quality of the data and each user confirms that the data in any block is true and accurate. Each block of data (or component of the transaction) is connected to the block behind it and to the block next in front of it. Each block is uniquely coded and cannot change its identity and therefore the data in each block cannot change. Every set of data in each block is totally transparent to all the users, and as the blocks are chained together, other blocks cannot be inserted between blocks and the data altered. As the chain grows through the shared user system the need for individual ledgers that captures individual user data is no longer needed as all the information and data is captured in each block and the chain represents all the transactional history and each data component. This clause arises because, under American law, a cargo owner is not able to make any recovery from the carrier for damage resulting from negligent navigation but may instead sue the non-carrying ship which in turn seeks recovery from the carrying ship in proportion of his fault. This would render a carrier indirectly liable for a loss for which he is not directly liable to the cargo owner. Every vessel has a captain, from the smallest yacht to the largest containership. The captain is the person in command of a vessel at a given time. …. Master means a person who has the experience and has passed the required examination to be licensed to command a vessel according to both international and national regulations pertaining to the size and range of the vessels in which the experience was obtained. Captain is a general and informal term referring to someone in the act of performing in that capacity. Master refers to professional qualification, captain to a state of command or authority. It seems like this isn't getting any simpler, but separating the historical meanings of captain and master shows us the way forward. In commercial shipping, master has an official regulatory meaning while captain does not. (http://gcaptain.com/call-captain-not/)} celestial navigation (n) (navig) Celestial navigation systems are based on observation of the positions of the Sun, Moon, Planets and navigational stars. Such systems are in use as well for terrestrial navigating as for interstellar navigating. By knowing which point on the rotating earth a celestial object is above and measuring its height above the observer's horizon, the navigator can determine his distance from that subpoint. A nautical almanac and a marine chronometer are used to compute the subpoint on earth a celestial body is over, and a sextant is used to measure the body's angular height above the horizon. That height can then be used to compute distance from the subpoint to create a circular line of position. A navigator shoots a number of stars in succession to give a series of overlapping lines of position. Where they intersect is the celestial fix. The moon and sun may also be used. The sun can also be used by itself to shoot a succession of lines of position (best done around local noon) to determine a position (Bowditch 2002) nebeska navigacija, astronomska navigacija practise celestial navigation provoditi astronomsku navigaciju primijeniti astronomsku navigaciju {Used primarily as a backup to satellite and other electronic systems in the open ocean.}

charterparty, charter party /ˈtʃa::təˌpa::ti/ (n) 1 (mar law) a contract of lease of a ship in whole or in part for a long or short period of time or for a particular voyage. It has been said that its origin lies in the mediaeval Latin carta partita or charta partita or charta divisa, where an agreement was torn into two pieces and one half was given to each party. Proof of the whole contract was no doubt difficult if one party was obstinate - modern methods of photocopying the contract for each party seem preferable. A charterparty is part contract of hire (affreightment (supra)) and part contract of transport (carriage). The proportion of affreightment decreases as one moves from a demise charter, to a time charter and then to a voyage charter, while the proportion of carriage increases from a demise charter through a time charter to a voyage charter. Affreightment is essentially placing a ship at the disposal of another party, while transport is essentially the carrier (supra) taking charge of goods. Hire (infra) is the consideration paid under demise and time charterparties; freight (infra) is the consideration paid under voyage charterparties and bills of lading . ugovor o najmu broda, pomorski ugovor o najmu, ugovor o iskorištavanju broda, čarter, čarter-partija: The typical tramp operates under a charter party, that is, a contract for the use of the vessel.; 2 ugovor o prijevozu dynamic positioning (=DP) (n) (navig) DP is a vessel capability provided via an integration of a variety of individual systems and functions. A computer-controlled system to automatically maintain a vessel's position and heading by using its own propellers and thrusters. Additional responsibilities include: Fresh water distillation, steering control, damage control, drainage, and sewage treatment. tehnička služba (ratnog broda): služba stroja (ratnog broda) A Division Auxiliaries Division maintains almost all of the ship's auxiliary engineering equipment on board the ship. Known as A-Gang, the Enginemen (ENs) are responsible for the ship's air conditioning plants, fresh water distillers, potable water system, sewage system, steering system, and galley equipment. odjel pomoćnih motora i uređaja (ratnog broda), E Division Electrical Division is primarily tasked with maintaining the ship's electrical distribution systems. Additionally, the Electrician Mates (EMs) are responsible for shipboard lighting, cathodic protection, casualty power, degaussing systems, laundry service equipment, galley equipment, and electrical tool issue and maintenance. elektrotehnički odjel, MP Division The Gas Turbine Systems Mechanical Technicians (GSMs) and Gas Turbine Systems Electrical Technicians (GSEs) are primarily responsible for main propulsion and electrical power generation. The GSMs maintain four LM-2500 Gas Turbine Engines, and all associated equipment, in two Main Engine Rooms, necessary to provide and control propulsion. odjel za turbinski pogon, R Division Repair Division is home to a mix of Damage Controlmen (DCs), Hull Technicians (HTs), and damage control petty officers. It is primarily responsible for maintaining the O'KANE's structural integrity and repair equipment. The Damage Control Assistant (DCA) provides general and specific training on proper fire-fighting, flooding, and other casualty response techniques. Every Sailor must first be a fire-fighter. odjel za popravke (u stroju i na brodu)
