He was afloat, semi-conscious and with his lifejacket inflated. When the mate returned to the bridge a short time later, the vessel was afloat. Fortunately, his lifejacket gave him the buoyancy to remain afloat and cling onto the side of the boat until the helicopter arrived. The fishing vessel remained afloat and on fire until later that afternoon, at which time the fuel tanks exploded and the vessel foundered.

The use of both pumps kept her afloat until help arrived in the form of a high capacity salvage pump, provided by the rescue services. Održati (s) u plutajućem stanju

A term used for the largest dry bulk carriers. The tanker derives its name from AFRA which stands for Average Freight Rate Assessment.

The ship was secured with four lines forward and four lines aft. Additionally, in normal operating conditions, the vessel had very little freeboard aft.

Both these spaces were adjacent to the aft bulkhead of the hold.

As a result, the generator’s exhaust fumes filled the engine bay and spread through gaps in an internal bulkhead into the aft cabin where two passengers were asleep.

 Afterwards the Second Officer accompanied the Pilot to the
A heaving line was thrown down from the ship to the single crewman on the aft deck of the tug, and the tug’s messenger line was attached. The buoys were stored on the aft deck. The rescue boat and its crane were located at the aft end of the vessel. The accelerated corrosion was partly due to the harsh environment in which the rescue boat and its crane were located, at the aft end of the vessel. The AB at the hatch controls was at the aft end of the hatch and was not able to see the second officer climbing down. Two water jets, from hoses, were then played at 45° into the air from the aft end of the bridge.

The forward draught was 4m and aft draught was 6.45 m. The thick black smoke had spread throughout the after end of the vessel via the open doors and hatches. This is not possible in an enclosed boat as the crew are mainly situated inside during lowering and there is only an opening at the side and at the after end of the boat. The fire damage to the aft engine room was extensive, and the vessel was out of service for more than a month. Looking through the door’s observation port they saw a fire around the after end of the port main engine. The second mate took the afternoon watch in the wheelhouse, while an AB carried out maintenance duties at the after end of the cargo hold hatch coaming. The vessel’s swing to port could not be checked (=stopped) and the aft mooring lines also parted. The forward and after mooring lines were secured in different ways: the forward mooring party used ropes on bights and left them on the winch warping drum so that rope tension.

The aft mooring party comprised the second officer, the carpenter, a welder and two engine room ratings. The forward and after mooring ropes were secured in different ways: the forward mooring party used ropes on bights and left them on the winch warping drum so that rope tension.

Crew members were at their forward and aft mooring stations. The officer on the aft mooring station passed a mooring line ashore, which then parted, and could have injured a crewman. Using his VHF radio, the second mate, who was at the after mooring station, shouted to the master that the ship was moving up the jetty.

A fire was noticed in the top tier of the deck containers aft of the funnel. The compartments aft of the engine room, for which access was gained via the deck, were all sealed shut.

At 0720, the aft spring line parted. The aft spring line slipped as weight came on it because the rope had not been secured correctly.

The Master or the Officer of the Watch (OOW) has to tell the officers in charge of the Fore and After (Mooring) Station to single up.

AIS data

AIS /ˈɛər iˈeɪ/ (–Automatic Identification System) (n) (navig, safety) Automatic Identification System (AIS) – Used to help identify vessels, to assist in target tracking (based on Global Navigation Satellite System), and to improve quality of information available to OOW. AIS continually transmits the ship's own data to other vessels adn VTS stations. It also continuously receives data from other vessels and VTS stations and, when linked to radar or ECDIS, can also display this data. AIS transmits: static data (MMSI number, call sign and name, IMO number, length and breadth, type of ship, location of position fixing antenna), dynamic data (ship's position, position time in UTC, course over grounds, speed over ground, heading, navigational status, rate of turn), and voyage data (ship’s draught, m hazardous cargo, destination and ETA, route plan – waypoints) (Seamanship Notes 2004).; AIS is a navigation and anti-collision tool enabling the exchange of ship-to-ship information.

brodova, AIS: AIS should be operational at all times AIS system is used to exchange vessel and navigation data including vessel name and call sign, length and beam, position with accuracy indication and integrity status, course, speed, heading and ROT and other specific information, all in real time. Data is shared with other nearby ships as well as coastal VTS (Vessel Traffic Service) stations. Vessels were usually tracked using AIS as manual acquisition and tracking was generally less reliable. All available equipment should be used by the OOW, whether be it ARPA, AIS or anti-collision alarms (COLREG rule 7 -Risk of collision). The vessel’s AIS was switched off. The primary means of navigation was paper charts. The IMO made the carriage of AIS mandatory under SOLAS V for all vessels of 300 GT or more engaged on international voyages from 31 December 2004. AIS is publicly broadcast via a VHF transponder device with the primary function of improving ship-to-ship and controlled water space ‘situational awareness’, such as major ports and traffic pinch-points like the Dover and Singapore Straits. AIS transmits dynamic position and movement data, voyage related facts and static information such as vessel details designed to enhance water space management within the VHF horizon.

sidrenjaka, dužina sidrenog lanca i konopa: Most anchor rodes are made up of a combination of rope and chain. At least some of the rode, the bottom portion next to the anchor, should be of chain or wire rope. In France, the regulations demand five times the length of the boat for the total rode of which one fifth, or one boat length, should be chain (or 2 boat lengths for boats over 9 metres). An anchor-rode is the connection system between anchor and the boat and its sturdiness during mooring is undoubtedly essential

Sidrenjaka: Catenary will be given every chance to prove itself. We will imagine a 16 m (~52') boat, and simulate 48 m of 12 mm chain. The distance from the seabed to the roller will be 8 m (giving an anchor scope of 6:1). A scope of 3:1, i.e. three times the depth of water for the total length of line is okay for most boats anchored in winds up to 5-6 knots (Force 3) or as a "lunch pick". A scope of 5:1 is desirable for winds around 25 knots but in a 60 knot gale a scope of 7:1 may be desirable

The reduction in vessel speed, and interruptions in the electrical supplies alerted the assistant engineer. As a result, he took the fire extinguisher from the electrician and proceeded forward along the floor plates to fight the fire on the engine. The company is seeking engine room officers with an unlimited assistant engineer license.

Each issue and the reports they contain are a valuable contribution to improving safety at sea and in port, so protecting lives, property and the marine environment. By working together, at sea and ashore our maritime professionalism can rise to this challenge. A 30m scallop dredger was at sea in moderate weather. One of our greatest dangers at sea is complacency. In my career at sea, spanning just over 47 years, I have seen the use of the word safety increase year by year and ... Blockchain Document of Transfer (BDT) is making its presence felt quite rapidly in our industry. The aim of the blockchain project (in South Korea) is to share data securely between all its participants and reduce the massive amount of administrative paperwork. (Kang, 2017; Zeng, 2017)

A blockchain is a distributed database, which is shared among and agreed upon a peer-to-peer network. It consists of a linked sequence of blocks, holding timestamped transactions that are secured by cryptography and verified by the network community. Once an element is appended to the blockchain, it can not be altered, turning a blockchain into an immutable record of past activity. (Seebacher & Schüritz 2017; Kang, 2017; Zeng, 2017)

Visibility was good with a moderate breeze. The depth of water was 20 metres, the weather was fine with a light breeze. The Master ordered the main engines and bow thrusters to immediate notice, and he and the chief officer remained on the bridge.

The company’s bridge procedures, checklists and navigational safety guidelines were set out in a series of bridge cards that were compiled together in the IMS to form a bridge manual. The bridge manual contains bridge cards for watchkeeping, bridge management, passage planning, navigation with ECDIS, preparations for arrival and pilot management.
The OOW was sitting in the port bridge chair where he had a direct view of both radar and ECDIS displays. After the vessel left her berth, her master, who was positioned at the aft-looking bridge console, handed control to the chief officer. A radar was allocated to the pilot for his own use on the port side of the main bridge console.

The layout of the central bridge console prevented the chief officer from utilising the ECDIS display to support the Master during pilotage. After the vessel left her berth, her master, who was positioned at the aft-looking bridge console, handed control to the chief officer. A radar was allocated to the pilot for his own use on the port side of the main bridge console.

The tow line became taut and the mate, who was at the bridge controls, stopped the winch as he could no longer pay out the line.

The OOW focused on finding a visual reference and did not utilise the bridge navigational equipment to effectively monitor the vessel’s progress.

The bridge manual contains detailed instructions for watchkeeping, bridge management, passage planning and pilot management. The bridge manual formed part of the IMS and detailed the company’s bridge procedures, checklists and navigational safety guidelines.
The fundamental requirements of planning and executing a safe navigational passage must be clearly and fully understood and implemented by all bridge officers. After lunch, the bridge OOW gave the duty engineers permission to test the main engine.

The SMS bridge procedures provided by the managers were comprehensive and included extensive guidance on the conduct of navigation using ECDIS. The company’s bridge procedures, checklists and navigational safety guidelines were set out in a series of bridge cards that were compiled together in the IMS to form a bridge manual.

Effective bridge resource and team management should eliminate the risk that an error on the part of one person could result in a dangerous situation. The principles of bridge resource management (BRM), such as consultation and cross-checking, are equally applicable to engine room operations, particularly during an emergency. Contributing to the circumstances that resulted in the collision was the inadequate bridge resource management between the master and the pilot.

It is imperative that pilots and ships’ bridge teams work together and implement the best practices of Bridge Resource Management to ensure the safety of both ships and ports.

The bridge team included the OOW, an AB and a deck cadet. All members of the bridge team should be briefed on the plan, encouraged to actively contribute to the vessel’s navigation. The bridge team consisted of the Master, the pilot, the third officer as the officer of the watch (OOW), and a helmsman. The bridge teams of both vessels were in VHF contact, but each team developed different understandings of how the meeting would be conducted. The bridge team comprised the master and the river pilot, who was conducting the navigation and providing pilotage advice to the master. The ship’s bridge team consisted of the master, second officer and an AB. As soon as a fire is detected, bridge team should be informed.

Casualty event

Casualty events are unwanted events in which there was some kind of energy release with impact on people and/or ship including its equipment and its cargo or environment. (IMO; www.emsa2018.com)

A bulk carrier with 20 crew members on board had suffered a marine diesel engine casualty that knocked out vessel’s main propulsion. The emergency services arrived and stabilised the casualty before he was craned out of the hold on a stretcher. He immediately instructed the casualty not to move and contacted the ship’s medic. The fishing vessel skipper skillfully manoeuvred the boat alongside the casualty to enable his colleagues to recover him on board.

A couple of minutes later the casualty was sighted, it was a dis-masted yacht.

The Navy is investigating a casualty to one of the main propulsion diesel engines (MPDE) on board the ship. The MPDE will need to be removed and rebuilt or replaced altogether.

catenary /ˈkeɪtəriəni/ (navig, seamanship) matematička krivulja kojom se opisuje oblik sidrenoga lanca dok je brod usidren (http://kb.rocna.com/kb/Scope_vs_catenary); a mathematical term which describes the shape of a flexible line (like chain) hung between two points (like the bow of your boat and the seabed); The sag in a line strung between two points https://www.ypiyachts.com/; the curve of the ground tackle lančanica, krivulja ovješenog lanca: a catenary is seen in the real world when a flexible line hangs between two points. It is the effect of gravity, a uniformly directional force, acting along its length. A typical example is the chain and rope connecting your anchor to your boat (http://www.petersmith.net.nz/boat-anchors/catenary.php) In moderate winds of 20 knots, catenary is obvious and a section of the chain lies on the seabed. A more serious scenario of 50 knots wind – the catenary has all but disappeared, and the angle of pull on the anchor is dictated primarily by the scope, not the weight of the chain. CAT fines (=catalytic fines) (n) (marine eng) using marine fuel with aluminium and silicon Cat fines (catalytic fines) are hard aluminium and silicon oxide particles that are normally present in heavy fuel oil. Cat fines in fuel entering the engine will cause wear: The higher the amount of cat fines, the higher the wear will be. The recommended maximum acceptable level of cat fines entering the engine should always be as low as possible and maximum 15 ppm Al+Si for short periods. Cat fines are hydrophilic and emulsify readily on contact with water. Removal efficiency falls as water content increases. Maintain settling tank temperature above 85°C to aid settling and water content removal.

Wear from cat fines in two-stroke engines is found in the combustion chamber on cylinder liner, piston rings and piston ring grooves, resulting in high wear rates and possible scuffing.

Cathode corrosion protection is a long-term solution to corrosion problems and regarded as a superior alternative to sacrificial anode systems.

\text{celestial navigation (n) (navig) Celestial navigation systems are based on observation of the positions of the Sun, Moon, Planets and navigational stars. Such systems are in use as well for terrestrial navigating as for interstellar navigating. By knowing which point on the rotating earth a celestial object is above and measuring its height above the observer's horizon, the navigator can determine his distance from that subpoint. A nautical almanac and a marine chronometer are used to compute the subpoint on earth a celestial body is over, and a sextant is used to measure the body's angular height above the horizon. That height can then be used to compute distance from the subpoint to create a circular line of position. A navigator shoots a number of stars in succession to give a series of overlapping lines of position. Where they intersect is the celestial fix. The moon and sun may also be used. Chartering broker (n) (mar law) = shipbroker agent posrednik, broker

Charter out (v) To hire a ship out to a charterer.

Charter owner (n) (mar law, shipping econ) A company that owns container vessels and charters out its vessels to container shipping companies rather than operating the vessels for liner services; also known as shipowner.

Charter party (=C/P) (n) (mar law) The contract for a charter is commonly called a charterparty. A document of contract, or agreement, by which a ship-owner agrees to lease, and a charterer agrees to hire, an entire ship, or all or part of the cargo space to carry cargo for an agreed sum under certain conditions.
A charterparty, or charter party, is a contract of lease of a ship in whole or in part for a long or short period of time or for a particular voyage. It has been said that its origin lies in the mediaeval Latin carta partita or charta partita or charta divisa, where an agreement was torn into two pieces and one half was given to each party. Proof of the whole contract was no doubt difficult if one party was obstinate—modern methods of photocopying the contract for each party seem preferable. A charterparty is part contract of hire (affreightment supra) and part contract of transport (carriage). The proportion of affreightment decreases as one moves from a demise charter, to a time charter and then to a voyage charter, while the proportion of carriage increases from a demise charter through a time charter to a voyage charter. Affreightment is essentially placing a ship at the disposal of another party, while transport is essentially the carrier (supra) taking charge of goods. Hire (infra) is the consideration paid under demise and time charters; freight (infra) is the consideration paid under voyage charters.

Charter rates are also affected by various other circumstances, such as crop failures and political crises. Under TC (time charter) contracts, vessels are hired for a specific period at a pre-decided daily rate. MidEast VLCC rates fell nearly 30 Worldscale points this week TC rates for dry bulk vessels have fallen considerably over the last few months. Chartering rates for Suezmaxes and very large crude carriers (VLCCs) have recovered rapidly in recent weeks after plunging to their lowest in more than year this summer. The gross charter rate is US$12,000 per day, minus a 4.75% commission paid to third parties, for a period of about twelve (12) months to maximum fifteen (15) months. Maritime Today <update@maritimetoday.com>.

The rate charged by charter owners normally as a daily rate for the use of their container vessels by container shipping companies.
Coast Australia were almost unchanged at W66.75 on Thursday compared with around W67.50 last week.

Closest point of approach (=CPA) (n) (navig, mar law) Closest Point of Approach is closest distance two vessels will come to each other based on their Current Course and speed. Usually calculated by AIS, ARPA and MARPA capable devices.

Najbliža točka mimoilaženja (u NM), najmanja udaljenost mimoilaženja, najbliža točka susreta, CPA: SHIP A: Container vessel, Course 140T, Speed. 23kts, CPA 0.5nm, TCPA 18min.
SHIP B: LPG carrier, Course 140T, Speed. 20kts, CPA zero, TCPA 21min. At 1000 the OOW noticed on the AIS receiver that the general cargo vessel was 3.0nm astern with a CPA of zero. With the ARPA showing a CPA of close to zero, we altered course. At this time vessel B was fine on the starboard bow and the OOW had predicted a CPA of 0.8 nm. Own vessel altered course 55 degrees to starboard to 0900T thus opening the CPA of the target to 1.5 nm astern of own vessel. With a ~ of ...: An overtaking vessel was coming up from the starboard quarter on a course of 2800 at 18.5 knots and intending to pass ahead with a CPA and bow crossing range of 0.4nm. The ARPA indicated a CPA of zero and a TCPA of 2125, target vessel on a course of 1030 T with a speed of 10 knots. I saw the tanker cross the general cargo vessel's bow, standing on and now showing a CPA of 0.1 nm at 10 minutes.

At a closing speed of nearly 29 knots, the vessels were now only 90 seconds apart. The closure timings of the ship's ESD valves were regularly tested and found to be satisfactory. The closure of ports and port congestion have caused disruptions in the supply chain and import and exports. The closure of the terminal was expected to impact over 100 jobs.

Watertight integrity: Inspect all watertight decks and bulkheads periodically to verify that progressive flooding cannot occur and that closure devices (such as watertight doors (WTDs) and duct closures) are in place and in working order.

In 2006 IMO adopted regulations on the coating of ballast tanks. When the ship came into the drydock the ecoshield coating was still in very good condition and did not need to be replaced or repaired. The Polar Code recommends the application of abrasion resistant, low friction coatings to vessels operating in ice-covered waters. When the survey ship was drydocked after navigating 2.5m thick ice with a high content of gravel and volcanic lava, the original coating, applied seven years ago, was virtually intact, undamaged.

Most of the presently used antifouling coatings for marine applications contain biocides to mitigate the effects of bio-fouling over underwater components.

cargo situacija kada brod zaostaje u svojem plovidbenom redu (schedule) i operativa treba “dovesti brod na schedule”. Te mjere dovođenja broda u vremenski okvir plovidbenog reda su “recovery measures”, a među njima je često CUT&RUN. To znači da se donosi odluka da brod u određenom trenutku prekida trgovačke operacije u luci, te određeni teret ostaje na obali neukrcan. To dovodi do preusmjeravanja bukiranog tereta na drugi raspoloživi brod (=cargo rollover). U tim slučajevima teret ostaje neukrcan i mora se pre-bukirati se na sljedeći brod. The cylinder condition monitoring system is intended to detect faults such as blow-by past the piston rings, cylinder liner scuffing and abnormal combustion. A thermocouple sensor is installed close to the pumping chamber to detect delivery valve leakage: if the delivery valve were to leak, fuel from the rail would be re-pumped, causing a temperature increase in the pump.

This led to an early detection of the leakage, quick response and averted a pollution incident. The controller covers sequencing, steady state and transient control, surveillance, fault detection and protection.

The fire detection and fixed suppression system suffered early damage in the fire, which prevented its operation. The use of fire detection devices is, therefore, increasing particularly in view of reduced manning and unmanned machinery spaces.

Electronic detection aids, such as automatic target acquisition and radar guard zones, can only help bridge watchkeepers if they are used.

Before departing the ship, the fumigator-in-charge briefed the chief officer, and issued him with two gas masks and some phosphine gas detection equipment.

Loading proceeded as planned, when a fire detector activated. (https://safety4sea.com/)

The installation comprises the separator, an automatic control panel, water detector, water detector controller and discharge detector.

Personnel entering tanks must also carry a CO2 detector together with O and LEL personal detector, (as per company policy when entering tanks after carrying Crude or Fuel Oil.

Fortunately the fuel leakage detector activated so that fuel leakage and attendant risks were minimal.

A diesel engine may be designed to work on the two-stroke or four-stroke cycle. The four-cycle Diesel engine is easier to reverse than the two-cycle Diesel engines as there are fewer moving parts to be changed in direction of rotation. The most powerful diesel engines in the world are two stroke crosshead engines. Dual-fuel or spark-ignited engines are already capable of operating with fuels such as methane and natural gas in gaseous form from fossil, biomass or synthetic sources, while diesel engines can run on liquid biofuels, biodiesel or e-diesel.

Unlike the 4 stroke engine, a two stroke diesel engine does not use the piston to push out the exhaust gas, instead, air enters the cylinder around bottom dead centre and sweeps or displace the exhaust gas from the cylinder.
4 stroke ~ četverotaktni dizelski stroj: In a four stroke trunk piston engine of 1100 kw output, a hole was (burn) through a piston crown.
srednjohodni dizelski stroj: On a medium speed 4 stroke engine the oil is supplied to the main bearings through drillings in the engine frame to the crankshaft main bearings.
brzohodni dizelski stroj: These ancillaries need electrical power which is usually provided by generators driven by medium- or high-speed diesel engines.
low sped ~ sporohodni dizelski stroj: The 130 TBN lubricant was evaluated for 3 months in the Sulzer 6RLB90 low-speed engine of a container ship, which operated at 85–90 per cent maximum continuous rating. Medium- and low-speed gas-burning engine designs are offered by the MAN Diesel group, which cites successful experience with a Holeby 16V28/32-G (gas injection)

It is a key indicator of how efficiently a port is operating, how quickly cargo is flowing through its terminals and how long a ship is spending in port. The longer cargo is stuck in port, the more it costs shippers. (https://www.marinetraffic.com/blog/no-time-to-dwell/); vrijeme čekanja tereta u luci prije njegova ukrcaja na brod ili izlaska iz luke kopnenim ili rječnim putem; vrijeme čekanja broda u luci na iskrcaj ili ukrcaj tereta vrijeme čekanja (tereta / broda) u luci, indeks vremena čekanja tereta na ukrcaj na brod u luci: Typically, dwell time is the time taken for exports inside terminal gates to be loaded onto a ship and imports onto a truck or train. In addition to easing terminal congestion, shorter dwell times enable cargo owners to save on storage charges applied by port authorities. Dwell time doesn’t just impact shippers, but ship operators too. Container vessels operate on schedules and a delay in any particular port is felt across the service. The shorter the dwell time, the lower the vessel and marine terminal operating costs.  https://www.marinetraffic.com/ Customs are working to reduce container dwell time at ports.  https://www.hellenicshippingnews.com/

Dynamic positioning (DP) a computer-controlled system to automatically maintain a vessel's position and heading by using its own propellers and thrusters. Position reference sensors, combined with wind sensors, motion sensors and gyrocompasses, provide information to the computer pertaining to the vessel's position and the magnitude and direction of environmental forces affecting its position (Wiki) Examples of vessel types that employ DP include ships and semi-submersible Mobile Offshore Drilling Units (MODU) Since the development of Dynamic Positioning which incorporates the usage of SONAR, Radar and other comprehensive detection, ships have started finding it easy to maintain their pace and steady their being in the deeper parts of the oceanic and sea waters. echo /ˈekəʊ/ (n) (navig) the reflection of a radar signal from an object; the display of the reflected signal on the radar screen jeka, odraz (na radarskom ekranu): the target ship’s echo
Multiple echoes can occur when a strong, short-range echo is received from a target. False echoes, unwanted echoes, sea echoes, and indirect echoes may be returned from either a passing ship or from a reflecting surface on your own ship, such as a stack. The echo strength depends on the peak power of the transmitted pulse and the characteristics of the target. Weak echoes, or those not seen at all may be the most dangerous. Indirect echoes may be returned from either a passing ship or from a reflecting surface on your own ship, such as a stack.

After fitting the new propeller, the contractor cast off and, while leaving the marina, pumped the bilges using the electric pump.

Another crew member who went to his aid also received an electric shock from the same source and sustained a serious injury.

They are usually caused by fuel spills, overheating components or careless use of electric welding or gas brazing gear. The officers became curious, seeing the electric welding cable leading from the engine room along the upper deck, and followed it to the hot work site in hold no. 3.

The bosun operated the electric winch briefly, and the manual winding handle, in the hands of the two other crewmen, swung rapidly and struck one of them on the head.

electronic chart /ɪˌlektrənɪk/ (n) (navig) The electronic chart displays the vessel’s ‘real-time’ position, course and speed. It also carries out different complex functions to help improve the bridge crew’s ‘situational awareness’ and can meld together radar imagery, ship information, chart activity and AIS information all into one view.

(https://www.marineelectronics.com/news/ecdis-maritime-accident-255821) elektronička karta: The mate was alone on the bridge, navigating with the aid of an electronic chart system while seated on the wheelhouse chair. The intended route had been prepared using the ship’s electronic chart display and information system (ECDIS) and the OOW selected the scale on the ECDIS display that closely aligned with the 12 nm range scale set. He was primarily using an electronic chart plotter with a GPS input, although he had two radars and a magnetic compass at his disposal.
Electronic Chart Display and Information System (ECDIS)

The OOW was monitoring the vessel's position on the Electronic Chart Display (ECDIS) but was not plotting the position on the paper chart. We have developed the Electronic Navigational Charts for the Strait (and our port) which can be used together with the Electronic Chart Display and Information System (ECDIS) for real-time navigation without the use of paper charts. The ship was fitted with two independent Electronic Chart Display and Information System (ECDIS) units.

Electronic Data Interchange (EDI)

It is recommended to thoroughly check the vessel's equipment, especially for the arrangement, configuration and adjustment of electronic devices so that errors in installation can be recognized in time and if need be already be dealt with during the sea trial.

Electronic engine control (EEC)

Microcomputer coupled with sensors and controls for fuel, coolant, and other on board systems, as well as self diagnostic ability.

Electronic navigation aids

It is essential that all mariners are not only trained in the operation of electronic navigation aids, but understand the weaknesses and how these aids should be used as a decision support system rather than a decisionmaking system.

Electronic navigational chart (ENC)

Compiled from a database of information this chart presents the OOW with a vector chart. Information is built up in layers so the OOW can decide to exclude certain features in order to keep the view clear and simple.

Electronic navigation equipment

The vessel’s electronic navigation equipment, which included the electronic chart display and information system (ECDIS), radar and the bridge navigational watch alarm system (BNWAS), were functioning correctly.

Electronic position fixing system

Navigators should use all available means to check the position of their vessel, but they must regularly verify the accuracy of positions displayed by electronic position fixing systems by reference to visual bearings and transits whenever available.

Some of the findings related to passenger briefings and emergency communication brought to light by the investigation were: The failure to notify those on board of an emergency situation delayed emergency response.

Emergency drills should be designed so that crews become familiar with all that they may be required to do. Emergency-related activities may include personal safety familiarisation and training, planning and conduct of emergency drills, proper response to actual emergencies.

Ensure that everyone on board is very familiar with the emergency equipment carried: both location and use. Most of the emergency equipment, including ventilation shut-off valves and the emergency fire pump, were not properly maintained and no-one could remember when they were last tested.

He donned an Emergency Escape Breathing Device (EEBD) and escaped into fresh air.

Lifeboat drills shall be made in order to fulfill the requirements of the annual emergency evacuation drill required by the unit’s Emergency Evacuation Plan (EEP).

During a fire drill, the second engineer entered the emergency fire pump room to operate the emergency fire pump: this involved negotiating a vertical ladder section within a straight access trunking.

Any faults or defects in the emergency generator/alternator, its prime mover and associated equipment, must be rectified and immediately reported to the appropriate management office. At some stage the ship’s emergency generator started, after the ship’s main diesel generators stopped as a result of lack of cooling water. It was not until 15 minutes later that the emergency generator was started and the generators were cooled down sufficiently to enable them to be re-started. On the next day, the emergency generator also stopped, resulting in a total loss of power.

Most ships which operate both outside and inside these ECA will therefore operate on different fuel oils in order to comply with the respective limits. In such cases, prior to entry into the ECA, it is required to have fully changed over to using the ECA compliant fuel oil, regulation 14.6, and to have onboard implemented written procedures as to how this is to be undertaken. Similarly change-over from using the ECA compliant fuel oil is not to commence until after exiting the ECA.

Ocean-going vessels emit hazardous air pollutants or air toxics that are associated with adverse health effects impacting populations living near ports and coastlines.

Because the tie bolts are so close to the crankshaft, some engines employ jack bolts to hold the crankshaft main bearing cap in position instead of conventional studs and nuts. MAN two-stroke engines employ constant pressure turbocharging. Employing radar within a wind farm is not reliable; therefore, the decision by the captain not to employ the radar while transiting the wind farm was understandable.

The vessel’s size, and that she was not carrying passengers, meant there was no requirement for the master to employ a pilot for this entry. Following an extensive career at sea, the river pilot had been employed with the company for over 15 years.

Administration (NCA) has initiated the first full-scale trial of e-navigation in Norwegian waters in conjunction with e-navigation technology and services company NAVTOR. The first e-navigation test involves the ferry MS Stavangerfjord digitally sharing its routing information with NCA via NAVTOR’s NavStation ‘digital chart table’. These (e-navigation) include but not limited to the Automatic Identification System (AIS), Electronic Chart Display and Information System (ECDIS), Integrated Bridge Systems/Integrated Navigation Systems (IBS/INS), Automatic Radar Plotting Aids (ARPA), Long Range Identification and Tracking (LRIT) systems, Vessel Traffic Service (VTS) and the Global Maritime Distress Safety System (GMDSS).

Different objects on an ENC have attributes; by clicking on a vessel or lighthouse, for example, more information about the object will become available. https://www.amnautical.com/ Because of the increased amount of data available, ENCs are suited for use with alarms and warnings to alert crews of danger in the ship’s path. https://www.amnautical.com/ There is an increased reliance on NOAA electronic navigational charts (ENC) as the primary navigational product and the decreased use of traditional raster chart products. https://www.nauticalcharts.noaa.gov/ dual ~ dvojni prikaz elektroničke karte, single ~ jednokratni prikaz elektroničke karte, - display prikaz na elektroničkoj karti: Navigation was conducted by eye and by reference to an electronic navigational chart display.
Tragically, accidents in enclosed/confined spaces continue to be one of the most common causes of work-related fatalities on board ships today. The enclosed space where the seafarers were working was filled with the toxic gas.

Investigation findings: Enclosed Space Entry checks were not carried out. The tanks were washed, made gas free and, after enclosed space entry permits had been issued, the crew could enter for mopping. After the broadcast of a distress call at 1125, the 26 crew abandoned the vessel in an enclosed lifeboat. While undertaking a routine maintenance check of an enclosed lifeboat an officer detected a strong odour when he opened the boat’s access door.

All seafarers, regardless of rank, must not enter an enclosed space without permission and then, only in accordance with ship management’s established procedures. Seafarers must not ignore the basic safety procedures and precautions when entering enclosed spaces.

The opposed piston two-stroke engine in service today is single-acting. In large diesel engines, the main engines must be reversible and should be able to produce thrust efficiently in both the directions (ahead and astern). The RTA72U is a single-acting, low-speed, two-stroke reversible marine diesel engine manufactured by New Sulzer Diesel Ltd.

A slow-speed two-stroke diesel engine is usually arranged to operate continuously on heavy fuel and have available a diesel oil supply for manoeuvring conditions. In the steam reciprocating engine, the up and down movement of the pistons is converted into rotary movement by piston rod and crankshaft.

In case of a controllable pitch propeller an unidirectional engine is sufficient. Most medium speed engines are unidirectional. (marine eng) stroj, brodski stroj, brodski motor, pogonski stroj

Engineering Department's mission is to maintain and safely operate O'KANE's engineering plant in order to support O'KANE’s primary mission as an instrument of national policy. The primary responsibilities of Engineering Department are to safely and efficiently provide propulsion, and generate and distribute electrical power throughout the ship. Additional responsibilities include: Fresh water distillation, steering control, damage control, drainage, and sewage treatment.

A Division Auxiliaries Division maintains almost all of the ship’s auxiliary engineering equipment on board the ship. Known as A-Gang, the Enginemen (ENs) are responsible for the ship’s air conditioning plants, fresh water distillers, potable water system, sewage system, steering system, and galley equipment.

E Division Electrical Division is primarily tasked with maintaining the ship’s electrical distribution systems. Additionally, the Electrician Mates (EMs) are responsible for shipboard lighting, cathodic protection, casualty power, degaussing systems, laundry service equipment, galley equipment, and electrical tool issue and maintenance.

MP Division The Gas Turbine Systems Mechanical Technicians (GSMs) and Gas Turbine Systems Electrical Technicians (GSEs) are primarily responsible for main propulsion and electrical power generation. The GSMs maintain four LM-2500 Gas Turbine Engines, and all associated equipment, in two Main Engine Rooms, necessary to provide and control propulsion.

R Division Repair Division is home to a mix of Damage Controlmen (DCs), Hull Technicians (HTs), and damage control petty officers. It is primarily responsible for maintaining the O’KANE’s structural integrity and repair equipment. The Damage Control Assistant (DCA) provides general and specific training on proper fire-fighting, flooding, and other casualty response techniques. Every Sailor must first be a fire-fighter.

engine speed (n) (marine eng) broj okretaja / obrtaja motora, brzina stroja:

Engine speed is controlled by a mechanical or electronic governor with hydraulic actuator. The ‘heart’ of the system was a microprocessor to which the actual engine speed and crankshaft position were transmitted as output signals. Full load can be accepted swiftly and smoothly at any engine speed, says EMD, and a 10 per cent overload capability can be exploited for two out of every 24 h of running. A reduction in engine speed compared with the BL550 limited the mean piston speed and yielded the increased output with virtually the same brake mean effective pressure. Although a late order to increase engine speed and helm was given, the vessel made contact with the buoy.

EPIRB /'iː pəːb/ (=emergency position indicating radiobeacon) (safety, navig)

SEE beacon: a radio transmitter that emits a distinctive distress signal to aircraft and satellite receivers supplying an exact position for search and rescue missions.

The EPIRB alerted the coastguard and enabled the recovery to be initiated. No matter where you are in the world, an EPIRB sends a signal to emergency responders through a satellite system called Cospas-Sarsat. An EPIRB is used to alert search and rescue services in the event of an emergency. It does this by transmitting a coded message on the 406MHz distress frequency. The owner also provided an EPIRB and one of the crew had a personal locator beacon. … the mariners use of VHF Channel 16 and an emergency position-indicating radio beacon (EPIRB) allowed rescue crews to quickly receive the distress call and pinpoint their location.

European Maritime Single Window (n) (mar law, logist) an agreement was reached (On 8 February 2019) between the European Council, the European Commission and the European Parliament, regarding the proposal to harmonize ship notifications in Europe, through the European Maritime Single Window. https://about.safety4sea.com/ Jedinstveni europski pomorski prozor (za elektroničku najavu dolaska brodova): A draft report published on 15 October 2018, by the European Parliament’s Committee on Transport and Tourism sets out a proposal for a Regulation creating a European Maritime Single Window environment. • The report focuses on the harmonisation of data elements and data sets, and supports the cooperation between customs and maritime authorities at both national and Union level. It also recognises that, even with a fully harmonised data set, relevant authorities might require additional data https://about.safety4sea.com/ Moreover, the draft report states that Member states should allow the use of port community systems, as long as those systems are then passing the necessary information to the National Single Window https://about.safety4sea.com/ harmonized ship notification through the European Maritime Single Window harmonizirana elektronička najava dolaska brodova putem Jedinstvenog europskog pomorskog prozora evacuate /iˈvækjʊeɪt/ (v) (safety) evakuirati, spasiti i odvesti na sugurno mjesto, spasiti se (ukrcavanjem u brodicu za spašavanje itd.): The chief officer was evacuated immediately and provided with resuscitation treatment, but could not be rescued. Drain cocks in exhaust and inlet manifolds are to remain open when machines are at rest and should be regularly tested and proved clear of blockages. The engine room fire was probably caused by the ignition of lubricating oil that sprayed from a fatigue-fractured fitting on one of the main engine’s pre-lubrication oil pumps onto the hot surface of the main engine’s exhaust manifold.

The piston uncovers the exhaust ports on the power stroke, the exhaust gas starts to leave the cylinder. The opening and closing of the exhaust and air inlet ports are shown diagrammatically in the typical timing diagram.
flowing across the cylinder head runs through the exhaust valve cages, significantly reducing the valve seat temperature.

Attempts to master decided it would be necessary to operate the engine room CO2 system to board and cleaned without risk of contaminating the lubricating oil system. Externally lubricated journal bearings used such situations, the use and handling of AIS information becomes more difficult, and the AIS can not be done until some time after the collision. threaded parts were reduced to 50% of their original diameter.

Risk assessment training must extend to all stevedores and seamen, particularly to those in charge of other workers. Extension of US Coastguard directives can be secured by plasma (ceramic) coating or chrome plating the surface of the uppermost piston ring.

To determine the extent of flooding, the skipper checked the fish room and found water at the same level as that in the engine room. The bolts were wasted to such an extent that the threaded parts were reduced to 50% of their original diameter. Feathering props are one of the best propellers for sailing boats when mixing performance under sail and power. they get their name due to the feathering blades, which align with water flow when in neutral. (http://myboatsgear.com/2016/12/27/sailboat-propellers/); an automatically self-pitching feathering propeller which varies its pitch depending on the operating conditions, thus maintaining maximum efficiency at all times. ... The blades automatically adjust their pitch to match the engine torque to the varying load conditions. (https://bingpropulsion.com/autoprop/); A propeller whose blades have been rotated so that the leading and trailing edges are nearly parallel with the aircraft flight path to stop or minimize drag and engine rotation.; Feathering props have blades that rotate 180 degrees so the leading edge is still the leading edge in reverse, which makes them more efficient in reverse over folding and fixed propellers. Max-Prop can literally bring a boat from 6 knots to a dead stop in a boat length https://www.practicalsailor.com/issues/44_2/features/Folding-vs-Feathering-Props_12354-1.html?ET=practicalsailor:e36748:2438214a;&st=email&ss=p_Grabbag012118 My installation required that the prop shaft be trimmed about 1/2 inch meaning that it could never again be used with a fixed prop: a critical concern to determine for your boat before undertaking...it is a marriage and divorce is always expensive. Consider this factor on any feathering/folding prop selection. https://www.practicalsailor.com/issues/44_2/features/Folding-vs-Feathering-Props_12354-1.html?ET=practicalsailor:e36748:2438214a;&st=email&ss=p_Grabbag012118 As the blades rotate 180 degrees in ¼ turn of the shaft a feathering propeller has the same efficiency in reverse as in forward. ... a feathering propeller is a low drag propeller. When motoring, the blades swing to the ahead or astern angled position, but under sail they ‘feather’, turning parallel to the boss. Feathering propellers typically produce nearly as much forward thrust as folding propellers and more forward thrust than those that are fixed. They are also generally more efficient than folding propellers when going astern. https://www.sailmagazine.com/diy/why-low-drag-propellers Feathering props create about 5-10% of a fixed prop’s drag, sometimes less, while folding props have almost zero drag.

I went with a Gori folding prop for my Bavaria Vision 42 (Volvo 40 hp saildrive) and have been very happy with it. It has the lowest drag of any prop when folded, excellent reverse thrust, little to no prop walk, and an "overdrive" feature that can keep the reverse prop pitch while moving forward, for use when motorsailing or in flat water, resulting in increased fuel efficiency. A folding or feathering prop will need more maintenance than a fixed prop A folding propeller will produce the least drag under sail.

The camshaft is either chain or gear driven from the crankshaft. The PTO at the free end accepts either gear-driven or belt-driven pumps and alternators.

Containerships that are equipped with cranes or derricks for loading and unloading containers and other cargo operations.

The resulting damage to the shaft and gearing and to the turning gear casing disabled the ship for a month and cost a six-figure sum to repair.

Torsional vibration involves the whole shaft system of the propulsion plant, engine crankshaft, intermediate shafts and propeller shaft, as well as engine running gear, flywheel, propeller and (where appropriate) reduction gearing, flexible couplings, clutches and PTO drives.

A chain-driven rotary-gear pump provides lubricating oil to the main bearings and through internally drilled passages in the crankshaft to both connecting rod bearings.

The crankshaft drives the camshaft by a train of gears and the cams lifts the pushrods, thus transferring the motion to the rocker arms, which swing on pivots.

If the gear wheels are misaligned, shock loading will result, which can lead to broken teeth. The camshaft was raised to be close to the cylinder covers and is driven via gear wheels.
